The Contest of Meaning: Critical Histories of Photography From The MIT Press

Photography's great success gives the impression that the major questions that have haunted the medium are now resolved. On the contrary, the most important questions about photography are just beginning to be asked. These fourteen essays, with over 200 illustrations, critically examine prevailing beliefs about the medium and suggest new ways to explain the history of photography. They are organized around the questions: What are the social consequences of aesthetic practice? How does photography construct sexual difference? How is photography used to promote class and national interests? What are the politics of photographic truth? The Contest of Meaning summarizes the challenges to traditional photographic history that have developed in the last decade out of a consciously political critique of photographic production. Contributions by a wide range of important American critics reexamine the complex -- and often contradictory -- roles of photography within society. Douglas Crimp, Christopher Phillips, Benjamin Buchloh, and Abigail Solomon Godeau examine the gradually developed exclusivity of art photography and describe the politics of canon formation throughout modernism. Catherine Lord, Deborah Bright, Sally Stein, and Jan Zita Grover examine the ways in which the female is configured as a subject, and explain how sexual difference is constructed across various registers of photographic representation. Carol Squiers, Esther Parada, and Richard Bolton clarify the ways in which photography serves as a form of mass communication, demonstrating in particular how photographic production is affected by the interests of the powerful patrons of communications. The three concluding essays, by Rosalind Krauss, Martha Rosler, and Allan Sekula, critically examine the concept of photographic truth by exploring the intentions informing various uses of "objective" images within society.

Editorial Review

From Library Journal

Editor Bolton has assembled 14 essays offering an alternate approach to the popular vein of post-modernist theory that suggests the understanding of form is ahistorical, i.e., not dependent on context. The book is organized around four questions: "What Are the Social Consequences of Aesthetic Practice?"; "How Does Photography Construct Sexual Difference?"; "How Is Photography Used To Promote Class and National Interests?"; and "What Are the Politics of Photographic Truth?" Essayists such as Rosalind Krauss, Allen Sekula, and Douglas Crimp aim to "repoliticize" the history of the medium, which they feel has been "neutralized" by formalist definition. Building on the dialectical approach of Critical Theorists, "these writers develop an understanding of meaning as a contest created out of opposition and negotiation." Fascinating and very well illustrated but rather heady. Essential for academic photography collections.

Review

Eminently readable, the critical essays collected here interrogate our limited understanding of so called art photography, by unmasking the ideological and political realities that have shaped both its production and interpretation.
